

Sabarnah.

14. 2. 28

My dear Deoachandbhai,

Here are some more instructions which Bapuji asked me this morning to convey to you. You suggested in your last letter to him that he should take to milk, whereas he expected you would send him a list of things from among the vegetable Kingdom which could be used as substitutes for milk. Is it not possible to discover such substitutes? Have you got an analysis of the food grains on which the ordinary village folk of India subsist? Can you send such an analysis to him? He would also be thankful if you could send him the chemical properties of the different kinds of oil - viz., almond oil, mustard oil, sesame oil and the like. The whole point of his present experiment is centred upon the idea of doing without milk without detriment to the body, and any help from you in that direction would be very much appreciated.

With regards,

J. J. S. S. S., Kusthavadu,

P.S.

If you know the process of making malted nuts, etc., you will please inform me.

K