My dear father,

Yours of 22nd Dec do hand only yesterday. The mail was unusually late this week, and perhaps that is due to stormy Dec.

The last week here was quite mild. It had ceased snowing on Monday. Tuesday was milder and we had good rains on Tuesday night, Wednesday. The snow on the walks has all melted away. But it is slightly colder today. We are nearing the end of January, and still the winter has not brought its rigour. It seems to be rather mild.

Mr Kanga is here; but we are busy with our examinations. I have already made an arrangement with him, and after the examinations are over, I shall let you know everything possible about Meganthis's courses.

My weight last week has kept me same. You may rest assured that I do attend to my physiological needs and I never think of slacking in providing for them.

Champa, I think, must be away to Rangoon, and so her letter goes to Rangoon this week.

I intend to leave this house and go into another after the examinations are over. The new house is yet to be searched for.

With respects,

Yours truly,

Prinkled
